Scrums

On the first day in my scrum team we got together and talked about where we were. Most of us hadn't even really started designing the site, so we decided to talk about what we wanted to have for next class. Most of us just wanted to get the site up and working but a few people wanted to figure out how to get a navigation bar working. After that we worked together as a team to get our sites at least made.

On the second day of the scrum my team talk about their progress together, and Aaron updated me via email. I could not make that day because I was out sick. I did make some personal progress at home and stayed in touch with Aaron via email.

On the last scrum day my team met and we were trying to bang out the final issues with our website. My website was probably the closest to finished so I gave a lot of advice to my teammates. Some were very interested in how I constructed my navigation bar. I emailed those interested, my html and CSS so that they could see what I did and try to replicate. They also gave me some tips for finding out what I needed to do for the rest of my portfolio in the future.

Overall I would say my scrum experience was very positive and I'm glad we did them. Although I had somewhat of a slow start, I did both contribute greatly to the scrum, as well as got a lot out of it to help myself.
